

Hot Off the Press

Wednesday, April 1, 2009

Skills Certification for the Canadian print industry?

Click here to read the full printing industry Certification discussion paper and to complete the survey.

Certification is one way of recognizing a highly skilled workforce.

To help the Canadian printing industry decide if Certification is right for us, CPISC has been working with a group of industry leaders and stakeholders to investigate the issue.

The result is a discussion paper and survey to help build industry consensus about a Certification program that will be both relevant and of real value to the Canadian printing and graphic communications industry.

Certification is also the next logical step, following the success and widespread adoption of the CPISC national Skill Standards for people working in the industry. Certification is a way of recognizing individuals who meet the Skill Standards, and it can also improve productivity and skill levels, and could help raise Canadian printing industry standards to new heights

To have your say on Certification click here to read the full Discussion paper or to complete the short survey by April 30.

Thank you for your participation.